

FRIDAY.

THE WAR.

The Battle of the 30th.

McMahon "Still Lives."

IMMENSE PRUSSIAN LOSSES

Bazaine Was Never Caged in Metz.

CONDITION OF PARIS.

BATTLE OF VAWX

THE FRENCH CAUSE DESPERATE

Radical Nominations in Illinois.

The war news last night was vague, and largely mixed with bogus reports.

A dispatch from Aix-en-Provence says that serious fighting is reported between Armagnac and Dau.

The Independence Bulge says Marshal McMahon while on the heights of Vaux, on the 30th, was attacked and fled back with great earnestness toward the Belgian frontier.

Le Public admits the spuriousness of the telegrams signed "Marshal Bazaine."

It is said that McMahon obeyed the Emperor's order to detach thirty thousand men to protect the Prince Imperial.

Severe orders have been issued by the Belgian government to enforce its neutrality.

The Empress remains in Paris, as do the diplomatic corps.

The siege of Strasbourg goes on, the city being badly damaged by the fire directed against it. At a meeting of the Corps Legislatif the deputation declared that Strasbourg deserved well of the country.

Though the panic in Paris is over, the ministers go to Tours immediately.

A Paris dispatch says the combined movements of Bazaine and McMahon have been most successful.

It goes on to say that the strategic plans have been well devised and promptly executed, and direct to all weak points of the enemy.

It is said in Paris that 200,000 Prussians have been either killed or disabled since the war began.

It is estimated that the war cost Prussia 10,000,000 francs daily.

Oliver is again in Paris.

Le Public says that the the government has good news. McMahon's march has not been disturbed.

Bazaine forbids correspondents to affix the name of the place whence they write.

Marshal D'Hailliers originates a report that the French won a victory at Courcelles, slaying 30,000 of the enemy.

It is reported that three army corps have entered France from the side of Baden.

No details of the defeat of McMahon have reached London.

La Liberte says that Austria had pledged herself to move on Prussia simultaneously with France; provided she was subsidized for doing so. M. Olivier agreed to this. The money, however, was not advanced, and France decided to go on without her ally.

Private telegrams from Paris show that the people there do not believe in total defeat of McMahon.

The opinion in London is that nothing can prevent the siege of Paris. The French cause is desperate.

Paris is accessible from England by way of Brussels. A letter from the city says:

Of course an early attack by a large Prussian army is expected, which causes a secret uneasiness and anxiety, but there is no outward expression either in words or acts.

Everything goes on just as usual. Shops all open and gaily dressed. Though business appears following its usual course, such is not the case, for the departure of thousands of strangers has given a severe check to trade. This is not apparent to the mere observer. There are loungers on the streets who frequent cafés at night, and the usual crowds throng the boulevards, sitting and talking as in former times. True, there is less gaiety and animation, and conversation is more serious and earnest, but all talk and discuss as before.

A special dispatch, dated at Florenville, Belgium, says the French were badly beaten on the Sambre road. There was furious fighting on the 30th between Armentières and Dancy.

Le Public says that battles were fought on the 30th and 31st, the first having been a surprise and a partial panic in the corps of Fally. In the other actions great heroism was shown by the French troops but there was a want of unity and the Prussians claim the victory. The troops of both the princesses were engaged. The new corps of Vinoy was in action. Marshal Bazaine is said to be active.

The Moniteur declares that the battle of Courcelles was a decided victory for Bazaine.

The Prince Imperial has left Reuil, and is now at Avesnes.

La Liberte reports the army of McMahon totally defeated and that only the right was enabled to effect a retreat. He was attacked by both Princes.

Lyons is being put in a state of defense by order of the minister of war, as he suspects the Prussians will attempt to take it by a coup de main.

A dispatch from Berlin says that McMahon's efforts to relieve Bazaine have failed in consequence of the defeat on the 30th, when the French loss was immense.

Since McMahon left Rheims, he has marched to Reuil, Vouziers, Buzancy, over the Meuse and through the Ardennes to Stenay, and thence to Montmédy.

NEW YORK, Sept. 1.—The World's London correspondent telegraphs:

We hear of serious outbreaks in various parts of Southern France and Brittany against persons suspected of German sympathy.

The peasantry of Champagne, Lorraine, and Alsace are rising upon the lines of the Prussian communications.

The Cairo

DAILY Bulletin.

DEVOTED TO POLITICS, NEWS AND LITERATURE.

BY JOHN H. OBERLY & CO.

CAIRO, ILLINOIS. SEPTEMBER 2, 1870.

ONLY DAILY PAPER IN EGYPT.

The Battle of the 30th.

McMahon "Still Lives."

IMMENSE PRUSSIAN LOSSES

Bazaine Was Never Caged in Metz.

CONDITION OF PARIS.

BATTLE OF VAWX

THE FRENCH CAUSE DESPERATE

Radical Nominations in Illinois.

The war news last night was vague, and largely mixed with bogus reports.

A dispatch from Aix-en-Provence says that serious fighting is reported between Armagnac and Dau.

The Independence Bulge says Marshal McMahon while on the heights of Vaux, on the 30th, was attacked and fled back with great earnestness toward the Belgian frontier.

Le Public admits the spuriousness of the telegrams signed "Marshal Bazaine."

It is said that McMahon obeyed the Emperor's order to detach thirty thousand men to protect the Prince Imperial.

Severe orders have been issued by the Belgian government to enforce its neutrality.

The Empress remains in Paris, as do the diplomatic corps.

The siege of Strasbourg goes on, the city being badly damaged by the fire directed against it. At a meeting of the Corps Legislatif the deputation declared that Strasbourg deserved well of the country.

Though the panic in Paris is over, the ministers go to Tours immediately.

A Paris dispatch says the combined movements of Bazaine and McMahon have been most successful.

It goes on to say that the strategic plans have been well devised and promptly executed, and direct to all weak points of the enemy.

It is said in Paris that 200,000 Prussians have been either killed or disabled since the war began.

It is estimated that the war cost Prussia 10,000,000 francs daily.

Oliver is again in Paris.

Le Public says that the the government has good news. McMahon's march has not been disturbed.

Bazaine forbids correspondents to affix the name of the place whence they write.

Marshal D'Hailliers originates a report that the French won a victory at Courcelles, slaying 30,000 of the enemy.

It is reported that three army corps have entered France from the side of Baden.

No details of the defeat of McMahon have reached London.

La Liberte says that Austria had pledged herself to move on Prussia simultaneously with France; provided she was subsidized for doing so. M. Olivier agreed to this. The money, however, was not advanced, and France decided to go on without her ally.

Private telegrams from Paris show that the people there do not believe in total defeat of McMahon.

The opinion in London is that nothing can prevent the siege of Paris. The French cause is desperate.

Paris is accessible from England by way of Brussels. A letter from the city says:

Of course an early attack by a large Prussian army is expected, which causes a secret uneasiness and anxiety, but there is no outward expression either in words or acts.

Everything goes on just as usual. Shops all open and gaily dressed. Though business appears following its usual course, such is not the case, for the departure of thousands of strangers has given a severe check to trade. This is not apparent to the mere observer. There are loungers on the streets who frequent cafés at night, and the usual crowds throng the boulevards, sitting and talking as in former times. True, there is less gaiety and animation, and conversation is more serious and earnest, but all talk and discuss as before.

A special dispatch, dated at Florenville, Belgium, says the French were badly beaten on the Sambre road. There was furious fighting on the 30th between Armentières and Dancy.

Le Public says that battles were fought on the 30th and 31st, the first having been a surprise and a partial panic in the corps of Fally. In the other actions great heroism was shown by the French troops but there was a want of unity and the Prussians claim the victory. The troops of both the princesses were engaged. The new corps of Vinoy was in action. Marshal Bazaine is said to be active.

The Moniteur declares that the battle of Courcelles was a decided victory for Bazaine.

The Prince Imperial has left Reuil, and is now at Avesnes.

La Liberte reports the army of McMahon totally defeated and that only the right was enabled to effect a retreat. He was attacked by both Princes.

Lyons is being put in a state of defense by order of the minister of war, as he suspects the Prussians will attempt to take it by a coup de main.

A dispatch from Berlin says that McMahon's efforts to relieve Bazaine have failed in consequence of the defeat on the 30th, when the French loss was immense.

Since McMahon left Rheims, he has marched to Reuil, Vouziers, Buzancy, over the Meuse and through the Ardennes to Stenay, and thence to Montmédy.

NEW YORK, Sept. 1.—The World's London correspondent telegraphs:

We hear of serious outbreaks in various parts of Southern France and Brittany against persons suspected of German sympathy.

The peasantry of Champagne, Lorraine, and Alsace are rising upon the lines of the Prussian communications.

BY JOHN H. OBERLY & CO.

CAIRO, ILLINOIS. SEPTEMBER 2, 1870.

ONLY DAILY PAPER IN EGYPT.

The sales comprised 22 pkgs strictly choice Northern at 28¢ each, and 16 pkgs Southern at 25¢.

Eggs—are in good demand, and receipts are falling off. Seven pkgs sold at 16¢, and 2 pkgs at 17¢, shippers count.

Poultry—is in good demand with rather light supplies. Old are selling at $1.00-$1.50, as to size and condition, and young at $2.00-$2.25 to $2.50 and $3.00 per lb.

Fruit—Peaches continue scarce, and none but cling-stones on the market, which sell at 50¢ the per one-third bushel box. Apples are plenty at $1.00-$2.00 per lb.

Vegetables—all kinds are abundant and ample supplies are daily received by wagons to fill the demands at previous prices.

Groceries—are quiet and unchanged on all descriptions.

Freights—are firm and an unsuccessful effort has been lately made to advance rates to New Orleans. Boats arriving here from above, all have very light cargoes, necessitated by the low stage of water now only 5 feet, and consequently need large amounts of freight to fill out. They can make more money carrying flour from Cairo at 40¢ per lb., than from St. Louis at $1. and all other freights from here are proportionately less. This is one of the most important advantages which Cairo possesses over all her more Northern competitors for Southern trade, which those who are ordering produce would do well to make a note of.

Wagons—have been constant removals into the city of furniture and other property from the surrounding villages likely to be occupied by the Prussians.

Within the past four days there have been constant removals into the city of furniture and other property from the surrounding villages likely to be occupied by the Prussians.

The Empress remains in Paris, as do the diplomatic corps.

The siege of Strasbourg goes on, the city being badly damaged by the fire directed against it.

At a meeting of the Corps Legislatif the deputation declared that Strasbourg deserved well of the country.

Though the panic in Paris is over, the ministers go to Tours immediately.

A Paris dispatch says the combined movements of Bazaine and McMahon have been most successful.

It goes on to say that the strategic plans have been well devised and promptly executed, and direct to all weak points of the enemy.

It is said in Paris that 200,000 Prussians have been either killed or disabled since the war began.

It is estimated that the war cost Prussia 10,000,000 francs daily.

Oliver is again in Paris.

Le Public says that the the government has good news. McMahon's march has not been disturbed.

Bazaine forbids correspondents to affix the name of the place whence they write.

Marshal D'Hailliers originates a report that the French won a victory at Courcelles, slaying 30,000 of the enemy.

It is reported that three army corps have entered France from the side of Baden.

No details of the defeat of McMahon have reached London.

La Liberte says that Austria had pledged herself to move on Prussia simultaneously with France; provided she was subsidized for doing so. M. Olivier agreed to this. The money, however, was not advanced, and France decided to go on without her ally.

Private telegrams from Paris show that the people there do not believe in total defeat of McMahon.

The opinion in London is that nothing can prevent the siege of Paris. The French cause is desperate.

Paris is accessible from England by way of Brussels. A letter from the city says:

Of course an early attack by a large Prussian army is expected, which causes a secret uneasiness and anxiety, but there is no outward expression either in words or acts.

Everything goes on just as usual. Shops all open and gaily dressed. Though business appears following its usual course, such is not the case, for the departure of thousands of strangers has given a severe check to trade. This is not apparent to the mere observer. There are loungers on the streets who frequent cafés at night, and the usual crowds throng the boulevards, sitting and talking as in former times. True, there is less gaiety and animation, and conversation is more serious and earnest, but all talk and discuss as before.

A special dispatch, dated at Florenville, Belgium, says the French were badly beaten on the Sambre road. There was furious fighting on the 30th between Armentières and Dancy.

Le Public says that battles were fought on the 30th and 31st, the first having been a surprise and a partial panic in the corps of Fally. In the other actions great heroism was shown by the French troops but there was a want of unity and the Prussians claim the victory. The troops of both the princesses were engaged. The new corps of Vinoy was in action. Marshal Bazaine is said to be active.

The Moniteur declares that the battle of Courcelles was a decided victory for Bazaine.

The Prince Imperial has left Reuil, and is now at Avesnes.

La Liberte reports the army of McMahon totally defeated and that only the right was enabled to effect a retreat. He was attacked by both Princes.

Lyons is being put in a state of defense by order of the minister of war, as he suspects the Prussians will attempt to take it by a coup de main.

A dispatch from Berlin says that McMahon's efforts to relieve Bazaine have failed in consequence of the defeat on the 30th, when the French loss was immense.

Since McMahon left Rheims, he has marched to Reuil, Vouziers, Buzancy, over the Meuse and through the Ardennes to Stenay, and thence to Montmédy.

NEW YORK, Sept. 1.—The World's London correspondent telegraphs:

We hear of serious outbreaks in various parts of Southern France and Brittany against persons suspected of German sympathy.

The peasantry of Champagne, Lorraine, and Alsace are rising upon the lines of the Prussian communications.

Provisions—are dull and unchanged. Stocks held here are light, but sufficient for the limited demand.

Butter—the market is well supplied, with fair demand for strictly choice only. Stocks of the lower grades are increasing.

CUNARD—

MAIL LINE

STEAMSHIPS leave weekly from New York, Liverpool and Queenstown.

For passage apply to CHAS. T. HINDE,